Memphis Business Journal _ January 18, 2018

A distribution facility in southeast Memphis will soon be home to Los Angeles Lakers blankets, University of Tennessee pillows and all types of branded bedding.

New York-based The Northwest Co., which sells the branded gear to companies like Walmart and Target, landed a fast-tracked, $5 million tax break for a Memphis distribution facility Wednesday, Jan. 17.

The company is expected to hire 25 full-time employees for the warehouse, along with up to 75 full-time-equivalent seasonal workers, according to its application to the Economic Development Growth Engine (EDGE) for Memphis & Shelby County, which granted the incentive in the form of a 10-year, fast-track PILOT (payment-in-lieu-of-taxes).

Northwest chose Memphis, in part, due to the ease with which they can ship products via rail from Memphis across the eastern United States, a company representative said at the Wednesday EDGE meeting. The company is set to renovate a warehouse located at 4755 Southpoint Drive and have the facility open by June. The building has sat vacant since 2012.

Not including the part-time and seasonal jobs, the project is expected to have a $2.6 million local tax benefit, after the incentive. Including those jobs, the project would have a $5.1 million benefit. The warehouse would also have a $10 million economic impact, according to an analysis of The Northwest's application by Younger Associates.
